teacher's edition Paul Robinson,1987 Laboratory Investigations for Basic Physics David R. Fazzini,2016 This laboratory manual is designed for use in a conceptual physics course for non science majors The general philosophy employed in this manual is that students learn more by doing and processing These investigations are not a recipe for confirming theories Rather these investigations direct students through a series of guided explorations in order for students to deduce the relationships among the topics under study Although each complete investigation is designed for a 3 hour laboratory session in a typical one semester course each investigation is broken down into a series of smaller explorations This allows for parts of these investigations to be used in laboratory sessions of shorter duration Each of the smaller explorations generally involves having students perform a task or measurement record observations and deduce relationships Questions within each exploration are designed to have students examine their data and to use their data to confront common misconceptions Each investigation concludes with a set of homework questions Some involve the graphing of desired data while others are designed to have the students make inferences and apply concepts Lab Manual for
