

AP CHEMISTRY CHAPTER REVIEW

CHAPTER 7: COVALENT BONDING

- You should understand the nature of the covalent bond.
- You should be able to draw the Lewis electron-dot structure for any atom, molecule, or polyatomic ion.
- When a single Lewis structure does not adequately reflect the properties of a substance, you should be able to draw resonance forms for it.
- You should be able to calculate the formal charge on an atom in an electron-dot structure.
- You should be able to give examples of substances that violate the octet rule, either because they are electron-deficient or because they have expanded octets.
- You should be able to apply the principles of VSEPR theory to identify the geometry of any molecule or ion.
- You should be able to predict the polarity of a substance based on its geometry.
- You should be able to identify the orbital hybridization of the central atom in a molecule or polyatomic ion.
- You should be able to identify the sigma and pi bonds in an electron-dot structure.

7.1 LEWIS STRUCTURES; THE OCTET RULE

Noble gases are generally nonreactive because they have a full valence shell. Many atoms form monatomic ions by either losing electrons or gaining electrons, in order to achieve the electron configuration of a noble gas. Gilbert Lewis suggested that nonmetal atoms can acquire a noble gas configuration by sharing electrons to form a covalent bond.

The Lewis electron dot structures below indicate the valence electrons for elements in Groups 1-2 and Groups 13-18

In a Lewis electron dot structure, the electrons normally exist in pairs. Bonding pairs are covalent bonds. Nonbonding pairs are lone pairs, or unshared pairs.

A single bond consists of one bonding pair. A double bond consists of two bonding pairs. A triple bond consists of three bonding pairs.

All other things being equal, triple bonds are shorter than double bonds, which are shorter than single bonds.
