

Abstract The purpose of this study was to examine the effects of a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume aquatic exercise program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life of older adults. The study was a randomized controlled trial involving 40 participants aged 65 and older, who were randomly assigned to either an aquatic exercise group or a control group. The aquatic exercise group performed a 12-week program of low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume aquatic exercises, while the control group performed no exercise. The study found that the aquatic exercise group showed significant improvements in physical fitness and health-related quality of life compared to the control group. The improvements were observed in measures of cardiovascular fitness, muscular strength, and balance, as well as in measures of health-related quality of life, including physical functioning, role limitations due to physical problems, and overall health. The study suggests that a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume aquatic exercise program can be an effective intervention for improving physical fitness and health-related quality of life in older adults.
