World Music

World music is basically any type of music from all around the world. This music is generally noticeable from the other countries, either by instruments used, or lyrically it is different. These things are what make it easy to tell the difference between the different countries and what type of music it is. World music can be anything from different countries so it may sound different to how we expect music to sound like, for example gamelan music is mainly a set of tuned bronze gongs. The Jegogog is the lowest pitched of the gangsa, the gangsa family consists of instruments which have brass or bronze keys suspended over a resonating bamboo tube. The Balinese gangsa differs from the Javanese because the keys make a louder sound and are designed to be struck with different hammers. This instrument also requires long resonating bamboo tubes so is played while sitting on a chair or bench. It has five keys (1, 2, 3, 5, and 6). This pattern is commonly found in both Java and Bali. It plays at submultiples of the pokok and is played particularly at important structural points as do the gongs.

The Jublag is the next higher pitched of the gangsa, this instrument also requires long resonating bamboo tubes so is often played while sitting on a chair or bench. The Balinese version has 5 keys (1, 2, 3, 5, and 6) seven key Jublag are also commonly found in Bali. It usually plays at submultiples of the pokok; the keys are struck more frequently than the jegogan and usually less frequently than the Ugal. It is one octave above the jegogan and shares tones with the Ugal. Another name for the Jublag is Cahung.

The Kantil shares its lower octave with the Pemade. They are above the Ugal which plays the melody. There are usually 10 keys (2, 3, 5, 6, 1, 2, 3, 5, 6, and 1) so the instrument spans two octaves.

Ruth A. Solie, 2004-02-19 Just as the preoccupations of any given cultural moment make their way into the language of music the experience of music makes its way into other arenas of life To unearth these overlapping meanings and vocabularies from the Victorian era Ruth A Solie examines sources as disparate as journalism novels etiquette manuals religious tracts and teenagers diaries for the muffled even subterranean conversations that reveal so much about what music meant to the Victorians Her essays giving voice to what goes without saying on the subject that cultural information so present and pervasive as to go unsaid fill in some of the most intriguing blanks in our understanding of music s history This much anticipated collection bringing together new and hard to find pieces by an acclaimed musicologist mines the abundant casual texts of the period to show how Victorian era people English and others experienced music and what they understood to be its power and its purposes Solie s essays start from topics as varied as Beethoven criticism Macmillan s Magazine George Eliot s Daniel Deronda opera tropes in literature and the Victorian myth of the girl at the piano They evoke common themes including the moral force that was attached to music in the public mind and the strongly gendered nature of musical practice and sensibility and in turn suggest the complex links between the history of music and the history of ideas The Study of Ethnomusicology
