

Real-World Ecology Analysis

Experiment 1a: During the Ice Age

Mathematically modeling an ecological system requires a complex understanding of the system's structure and the interactions between its components. In this experiment, we will analyze a real-world ecological system during the Ice Age, focusing on the interactions between different species and the environment. The system is modeled using a set of differential equations that describe the changes in the population of different species over time. The model is based on the following assumptions:

- The system is a closed system, meaning that no individuals enter or leave the system.
- The population of each species is represented by a vector \mathbf{x} , where x_i is the population of species i .
- The interactions between species are represented by a matrix \mathbf{A} , where A_{ij} is the interaction between species i and species j .
- The system is modeled using the following differential equations:

The system is modeled using the following differential equations:

$$\frac{dx_i}{dt} = \sum_{j=1}^n A_{ij} x_j$$

where \mathbf{x} is the vector of population sizes, \mathbf{A} is the matrix of interaction coefficients, and t is time. The system is modeled using the following differential equations:
