Reality TV

Does anyone know what MTV stands for? If you guessed music television, then take another guess. MTV is fundamentally another term for reality television. The number of aired reality show by far exceeds the number of actual music aired. Over the past decade there has been a plethora of new reality shows on almost every channel, predominantly MTV.

The most controversial show that has come to light is The Real World. The premise of the show is to test the limits of each cast member and watch how they will react in various situations. On the show no one character is the "same" as another. Casting directors carefully select seven cast members with varying personality so that the drama will sure to follow. In order to pull off a guaranteed drama-filled season, producers are going to the extreme to ensure every episode is action-packed. Hopeful participants go through rigorous questioning and background checks before they even step a foot into the multimillion-dollar house.

De Zengotita and Prose both argued that reality television shows affects the human mind into thinking that everything on television a win or go home situation. They say that these reality television shows mislead the viewers, and it dulls their sense of proper behavior and respect for others in society. Comparing reality shows like Survivor or even The Bachelorette, to the television show Real World, it would agree and disagree with both De Zengotita and Prose's
