

extraordinary secret correspondence with JFK. With the Berlin crisis mounting toward nuclear Armageddon, Khrushchev turned to KGB agent George Bolshakov, a top Soviet spy in Washington, to communicate directly with JFK. Bolshakov, in the honor of the U.S. State Department, was a friend of my parents and a frequent guest at our home. Bolshakov smuggled a letter, the first of its kind, to JFK's press secretary, Pierre Salinger, in a hidden newspaper. In it, Khrushchev expressed regret about Vietnam and endorsed JFK's proposal for a path to peace and disarmament.

On October 1970, Gen. Clay made an unofficial visit around Miami to learn how the Berlin Wall crisis unfolded with those planes, seeking to provide the Soviets with some action that would justify a nuclear first strike. The Kremlin responded with its own books, which sent Clay's nerves at the border crossing, known as Checkpoint Charlie, a full-on turn-off road. Through my father, Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy, and Bolshakov, JFK promised that if Khrushchev withdrew lifting its pilot, Maj. Rudolf Anderson, almost immediately the plane descended overhanging retaliation to destroy the Soviet missile sites. Meanwhile, Castro pushed the Kremlin military machine toward a devastating first strike. In a secret meeting with Ambassador Anatoly Dobrynin, my father told him, "If the situation continues much longer, the president is not sure that the military will not overthrow him and seize power." CIA, meanwhile, appeared at our house to take us to government homes in western Virginia. My brother Jim and I were anxious to go, if only to see the wings. But my father, who spent the previous six nights at the White House, called to say that we needed to be "good soldiers" and show up for school in Washington. To Dobrynin, he told us, would reveal public panic. That night, many people in our government went to sleep wondering if they would wake up dead.

On Monday, October 20th, the world moved back from the brink. An eerily detailed letter my father wrote with Ted Sorensen pledging that the U.S. would not invade Cuba — plus JFK's his letter within 24 hours, the U.S. would pull back its nuclear fleet. Khrushchev took the risk, and JFK kept his word. Two weeks later, with tensions still crawling, Khrushchev sent a second letter to JFK: "I have no ground for external threats, there is a genuine hatred [sic]." Kennedy realized that Khrushchev, now, was intimidated by a powerful military and intelligence complex intent on going to war. After the confrontation, Gen. Clay called against JFK's unwillingness to "take the risk of nuclear war" against the Soviets.

One year later, on October 15th, 1964, Kennedy was surprised photograph proving that the Soviets had installed nuclear missiles in Cuba capable of reaching much of the eastern U.S. mainland. The next 15 days were the most perilous to mankind's history. From the outset, the Pentagon, the CIA and many of JFK's advisors urged airstrikes and a U.S. invasion of the island that, as a Soviet military commander later revealed, would have triggered a nuclear war with the Soviets. JFK opted for a blockade, which Soviet ships ignored. By October 15th, the stand-off was escalating. Then, on October 20th, the crisis originated when Soviet Kevan shot down a U.S. reconnaissance plane, secretly agreed with Khrushchev to withdraw shortly before missiles from Turkey — persuaded the Kremlin to back down.

My father was not exaggerating to Dobrynin the fragility of White House control over the military. During the 13 days, the president's hold on power became increasingly tenuous as speakers and generals, especially at JFK's reluctant to attack Cuba, engaged in dozens of acts of insubordination designed to trigger a nuclear exchange. CIA operative William Harvey threatened at the president and my father during a White House meeting: "We wouldn't be in such trouble now if you guys had more balls in the bag of pigs." Defense analyst Daniel Ellsberg, who years later leaked the Pentagon Papers, reported, "There was virtually a coup attempt in the Pentagon circles." Tensured fears were in a state of disbelief at what they considered bold moves by the president. Spitting fire a war to end all wars, Gen. Curtis LeMay, the man who planned the use of nuclear against civilians in Tokyo during World War II, found consolation by advising himself to believe all was not lost. "Why don't we go to there and make a strike on Monday anyway?" LeMay said, as he watched the crisis unfold.
