Nowlan, 2020-05-21. The Airlords of Han. One of our Wyoming girls on contact guard near Pocono blundered into a hunting camp of the Bad Bloods, one of the renegade American gangs which occupied the Blue Mountain section north of Delaware Water Gap. We had not invited their cooperation in this campaign for they were under some suspicion of having trafficked with the Hans in past years, but they had offered no objection to our passage through their territory in our advance on Nu York. Fortunately, our contact guard had been able to leap into the upper branches of a tree without being discovered by the Bad Bloods for their discipline was lax and their guard careless. She overheard enough of the conversation of their bosses around the camp fire beneath her to indicate the general nature of the Han plans. After several hours, she was able to leap away unobserved through the topmost branches of the trees and, after putting several miles between herself and their camp, she ultrophoned a full report to her contact boss back in the Wyoming Valley. My own ultrophone field boss picked up the message and brought the graph record of it to me at once. Her report was likewise picked up by the bosses of the various gang units in our line and we had called a council to discuss our plans by word of mouth.

The Airlords of Han. Beyond Words Press, Philip Francis Nowlan, 2020-09-05. In a previous record of my adventures in the early part of the Second War of Independence, I explained how I, Anthony Rogers, was overcome by radioactive gases in an abandoned mine near Scranton in the year 1927 where I existed in a state of suspended animation for nearly five hundred years and awakened to find that the America I knew had been crushed under the cruel tyranny of the Airlords of Han fierce Mongolians who as scientists now contend had in their blood a taint not of this earth and who with science and resources far in advance of those of a United States economically prostrate at the end of a long series of wars with a Bolshevik Europe in the year 2270 A D had swept down from the skies in their great airships that rode repeller rays as a ball rides the stream of a fountain and with their terrible disintegrator rays had destroyed more than four fifths of the American race and driven the other fifth to cover in the vast forests which grew up over the remains of the once mighty civilization of the United States
