Fall 2023

School of Education, Humanities and Social Science

Course instructor

Max Waltman (max.waltman@hh.se), assistant professor in political science

Posted on Blackboard, August 19, 2023

Course content

How to understand and define populism are debated themes within political science. The objective of the course is for students to acquire conceptual, theoretical, and empirical knowledge of the meanings, causes, and effects of populism, as well as its historical and current character in various contexts. The students will also develop the ability to assess different academic perspectives on the topic and to independently and critically analyze populist rhetoric, as well as the social, economic, and political conditions that promote the growth of populism. Lastly, the students will develop the ability to analyze the complex relationship between populism and democracy. Consult the university-issued course syllabus for more details on course content and learning outcomes.

Course structure

The course runs over the first half of the fall semester (10 weeks) and corresponds to 50% of a full-time study load. The course combines in-person and online classes with self-study (course literature and assignments). Online participation in campus classes may be arranged if requested. Most classes are given as seminars that rely on student input to provide a high-quality learning environment for all. Participation in classes is not mandatory but highly recommended.

Course examination and assessment

To pass the course, the student must submit and receive a passing grade for a portfolio of three assignments at the end of the course (take-home exam). See separate instructions distributed during the first class and subsequently posted on Blackboard. Registered students that do not submit or fail the take-home exam will have two more opportunities to submit exams during the academic year. The dates for these follow Halmstad University's academic calendar.
