

hyperaldosteronism. Loss of gastric fluid via nasogastric suction or vomiting causes Metabolic Alkalosis as a result of the loss of hydrochloric acid. Options 1, 3, & 4 are incorrect interpretations.

A client with a 3-day history of nausea and vomiting presents to the emergency department. The client is hypoventilating and has a respiratory rate of 10 breaths/min. Arterial blood gases are drawn and the nurse reviews the results, expecting to note which of the following?

- 1) A decreased pH and an increased  $\text{CO}_2$
- 2) An increased pH and a decreased  $\text{CO}_2$
- 3) A decreased pH and a decreased  $\text{HCO}_3^-$
- 4) An increased pH with an increased  $\text{HCO}_3^-$  - answer Answer: 4

Rational: Clients experiencing nausea and vomiting would most likely present with metabolic alkalosis resulting from loss of gastric acid, thus causing the pH and  $\text{HCO}_3^-$  to increase. Symptoms experienced by the client would include hypventilation and tachycardia. Option 1 reflects a respiratory acidotic condition. Option 2 reflects a respiratory alkalotic condition. Option 3 reflects a metabolic acidotic condition.

A nurse caring for a client with an ileostomy understands the the client is most at risk for developing which acid-base disorder?

- 1) Metabolic Acidosis
- 2) Metabolic Alkalosis
- 3) Respiratory Acidosis
- 4) Respiratory Alkalosis - answer Answer: 1

Rational: Metabolic Acidosis is defined as total concentration of buffer base that is lower than normal, with a relative increase in the hydrogen ion concentration. This results from loss of buffer bases or the retention of too many acids without sufficient bases, and occurs in conditions such as renal failure, diabetic ketoacidosis, from the production of lactic acid, from the ingestion of toxins (such as acetylsalicylic acid -aka- aspirin), malnutrition, or severe diarrhea. Intestinal secretions are high in bicarbonate and may e lost through enteric drainage tubes or an ileostomy, or with diarrhea. These conditions result in metabolic acidosis. Options 2, 3, & 4 are incorrect interpretations and do not occur in the client with an ileostomy.

“(Base/Bicarbonate is lost through an ileostomy)”

A nurse is caring for a client with diabetic ketoacidosis and documents the the client is experiencing Kussmaul's respirations. Based on this documentation, which of the following did the nurse observe?

- 1) Respirations that cease for several seconds
- 2) Respirations that are regular but abnormally slow
- 3) Respirations that are labored and increased in depth and rate
