

Sony Financial Group creates new financial businesses without being constrained by existing frameworks

Akio Morita, the founder of Sony Corp., visited Chicago in the late 1950s to open a sales office for transistor radios.

He was shocked to discover that the massive skyscraper towering over the streets was owned by the largest life insurance company in America at that time.

This is said to be the inspiration of his dream for Sony Group to have its own financial institution and to build a magnificent skyscraper of its own one day.

His entrepreneurial spirit drove him to adapt to the diversifying needs of customers and solve the problems facing society himself.

The Sony Spirit to "do what has never been done before" has been passed down from one generation to the next, and the Sony Group has taken advantage of financial liberalization and deregulation to create a new financial business without being constrained by existing frameworks.
