

The first major step in the development of a new technology is the identification of the problem to be solved. This is often done by a team of experts in the field, who work together to define the problem and to develop a plan for solving it. Once the problem has been identified, the next step is to develop a prototype. This is often done by a team of engineers, who work together to design and build a prototype of the technology. The prototype is then tested to see if it works as intended. If it does, the next step is to develop a full-scale version of the technology. This is often done by a team of engineers, who work together to design and build a full-scale version of the technology. The full-scale version is then tested to see if it works as intended. If it does, the technology is ready for commercialization.
