The diagram illustrates the 6 Sigma DMAIC process, a structured methodology for process improvement. It consists of five main steps, each represented by a colored box with a detailed description of its goals and activities:

- Define (Green): Focuses on identifying the project's purpose, goals, and customer requirements. Key activities include defining the project charter, selecting a team, and identifying the process to be improved.
- Measure (Green): Involves collecting data to understand the current process performance. Key activities include identifying critical-to-quality (CTQ) characteristics, developing a data collection plan, and gathering baseline data.
- Analyze (Green): Focuses on identifying the root causes of process defects or variations. Key activities include analyzing data to find patterns, using tools like fishbone diagrams, and identifying potential causes.
- Improve (Green): Involves developing and implementing solutions to address the root causes. Key activities include generating ideas for improvement, evaluating options, and implementing the chosen solution.
- Control (Green): Focuses on maintaining the improved process performance over time. Key activities include developing control plans, monitoring process performance, and implementing corrective actions.

Arrows indicate the sequential flow from Define to Measure, Measure to Analyze, Analyze to Improve, and Improve to Control. Additionally, a feedback loop arrow connects the Control step back to the Measure step, emphasizing the ongoing nature of the process.
