Abstract

Reflective journals have emerged as an effective means of monitoring and developing reflective practice in higher education, as part of a wider metacognitive strategy to transform traditional learning approaches. In addition, assessment procedures of reflective journals appear to be an important factor in enhancing commitment to learning and reflection.

This paper explores the effects of the use of journal writing and formative feedback on the quality of reflective practice, by presenting a case study of reflective learning in a master's degree program in the North of Italy, in 2014/2015.

The article contributes to the current debate about the effectiveness of one-to-one writing tuition by analyzing student writing through qualitative analysis and quantitative trend assessment. In particular, it provides evidence on formative feedback efficacy in developing the quality of reflective practice. Unlike much of the research into writing support, this study seeks to evaluate the impact of feedback use not only by measuring student perceptions of effectiveness or level of satisfaction, but also by assessing the development of reflective practices.

Introduction

Educational sciences have shown the importance of metacognitive competencies in learning processes and more recently defined them as a promising field for evidence-based learning (Dunn, Saville, Baker, & Marek, 2013). Reflective practice, as a form of metacognitive competence, involves questioning our own ways of being, relating, and acting (Hibbert & Cunliffe, 2015) and presupposes students' engagement in critical reflection on beliefs, values, feelings, and implicit assumptions that are used in setting and solving a problem

The Psychologically Literate Citizen Dana Dunn, 2013-01-01 The concepts of psychological literacy and the psychologically literate citizen promise to invigorate a new global approach to psychology education They pose a basic question What attributes and capabilities should undergraduate psychology majors acquire Many psychological organizations have defined psychological literacy by guidelines and lists of student learning outcomes but although psychology educators across the globe have been working towards helping students to acquire these attributes over the past 50 years educators have only recently explicitly delineated attributes and learning outcomes and sought to develop appropriate learning teaching and assessment strategies including whole program approaches The contributors to this volume argue that psychological literacy is the most important outcome of an undergraduate psychology education and that psychologically literate citizens use their knowledge of psychology to problem solve in ethical and socially responsible ways that directly benefit their communities In this book a rich variety of international perspectives contribute to the development of the two key concepts of psychological literacy and the psychologically literate citizen Authors provide practical guidance for classroom psychology educators as well as curriculum developers and reviewers Ultimately they make the case for a paradigm shift in psychology education
