The Economic Value of Landscapes C. Martijn van der Heide, Willem Heijman, 2013. This book aims to explore the avenue of landscape economics and provides the building blocks from different scientific disciplines for an economic analysis of landscapes. What exactly constitutes and determines the value of a landscape? It focuses on the value of landscapes in its broadest sense, thereby covering a variety of topics, including stakeholder involvement in landscape design, landscape governance, and landscape perceptions from different countries. Merely saying that landscapes have value or are important is not sufficient, not when resources are scarce and have alternative uses. Measuring and quantifying the economic value of changes in landscapes would help ensure that landscape management decisions are both economically rational and sound.

Industrial Relations in Small Companies Christian Dufour, 2007 Reference is often made to small companies but little is known about them especially regarding industrial relations How can small companies be defined Is their small size a sufficient feature for them to be considered the same If they are different from each other what makes them so Is the distinction between them and other companies big ones relevant In what way is life organised in such units where employer and employees are in very close contact with each other In order to answer these questions the authors of this innovative book carried out surveys together in France Sweden and Germany They met employers employees union members and industrial relations specialists Comparisons of these three national cases show that small companies do have common features that transcend frontiers They do however also have national characteristics They therefore warrant being analysed and understood in something other than merely negative terms It thus appears that small companies are not so far off resembling big ones
