

One of the remarkable aspects of the founding fathers was that they included the amendment process to the United States constitution. While writing this constitution the founding Fathers Realized that change was very unavoidable. The constitution would need to adapt to new conditions of this time if it was to last for centuries. To consider these changes, the fathers outlined a method for adapting to these constitutions. The amendments were passed to bring political, social, and economic changes to American society. Two constitutional amendments that have changed American society are the 13th and 19th amendments.

To begin, the 19th Amendment changed American Society because it granted American women the right to vote, a right known as women's suffrage, and was ratified on August 18, 1920, ending almost a century of protest. Being in the 1800's, women had to protest and petition to get their right to vote, but it took them a while. Between 1878, when the amendment was first introduced in Congress, and August 18, 1920, when it was ratified, champions of voting rights for women worked very hard, but strategies for achieving their goal varied. Some thought of passing acts in many states, but only nine adopted the women suffrage legislation by 1912. When it came to about 1916 almost all of the major suffrage organizations were united behind the goal of this constitutional amendment. By then the House of Representatives passed the amendment, and the senate followed too. The amendment obtained three fourths of the states and was ratified after Tennessee became the 36th state to ratify the amendment.

To add on, The 19th Amendment played a pivotal role in promoting reproductive rights for women, ushering in a new voting population with a political agenda that would ultimately legalize contraception and abortion. Women also experienced economic progress as a result, with the increased availability of family-planning services and supplies allowing more women to enroll in higher education and enter professional occupations. Although the amendment enfranchised all women, to ensure the amendment included women regardless of race in practice rather than just on paper, African American women worked tirelessly to connect suffrage to both gender and race in all regions of the country. African American suffragists believed voting was a tool to protect the African American individual's citizenship and a mechanism to promote racial equality in society. The amendment ultimately granted suffrage to the majority of African American women in name only, but African American women continued to fight for the vote, as well as economic opportunities and reproductive rights and health. On the 50th anniversary of the March on Washington, we honor their efforts, which were fully realized only after the Voting Rights Act was enacted in 1965. As the thirteenth amendment followed the Civil War, the nineteenth amendment followed World War One. This war took many men to fight in Europe, leaving women to take on new responsibilities and decision-making outside the home. Furthermore, the women's movement had been in full swing for nearly a century by this point, since the First Industrial Revolution created the factory system that allowed some women to be able to support themselves. The Seneca Falls Convention was the first organized challenge to the so-called "Cult of Domesticity" that had dominated American Society. Many suffragists thought that the fifteenth amendment would give the vote to women, not just freed men. When women realized that they had been left out, it revitalized the growing Women's Suffrage movement and helped to pass the nineteenth amendment that allowed women to vote. This did have a reasonable impact on American Society because it started to paint the picture that women are equal to men and should not be denied equal opportunities. Some thought that the nineteenth amendment meant the struggle for equality was won because women could vote. But that was not true economically, educationally, or politically for many decades. A new feminist movement that
