The Journal of the American Medical Association (JAMA) has published a study that suggests that the use of a computer program to analyze medical records can help identify patients who are at risk of developing a heart attack or stroke. The study, which was conducted by researchers at the University of Michigan, found that the program was able to identify patients who were at risk of developing a heart attack or stroke with a accuracy of 80 percent. The researchers say that the program could be used to help doctors identify patients who are at risk of developing a heart attack or stroke and to provide them with the appropriate treatment. The program was able to identify patients who were at risk of developing a heart attack or stroke by analyzing their medical records, including their blood pressure, cholesterol levels, and smoking status.
