However IQ tests and other measures of supposedly natural talent are poor predictors of performance On the other hand questionnaires designed to measure perseverance and determination correlate these qualities with success Hard workers with determination can succeed even in fields like math which students usually regard as dominated by people with talent or genius Grit itself is not a fixed characteristic Rather it is a trait that can be learned and cultivated Individuals can build grit by focusing on their own passions and by cutting out activities or goals that distract from more central endeavors Grit can also be built through positive reinforcement People who are taught that hard work can lead to success are more likely to put in hard work and to be successful Parents and teachers can also encourage grit Extracurricular activities which help children to focus on their passions and to achieve concrete goals can help build perseverance Cultures or communities that focus on hard work and positive achievement like some sports teams can also enhance the grit of team members and participants Grit is not just about success it is also about fulfillment Hard work in pursuit of passion is exciting and satisfying Determined people not only succeed but attain personal satisfaction even when they experience setbacks or failure The study of grit is therefore vital to individual happiness as well as individual achievement
