

THE SURPRISE

What the hell was I thinking? Just the thought of doing the awkward 'hello' made me want to cringe. I typed in my passcode and looked at his profile for the millionth time. He looked normal, I guess. The aroma of fatty fast food wafted over me as the speaker system screamed his train's arrival. My pulse raced and my legs felt heavy. Slipping from my fingers, the balloon floated skyward rapidly towards the enormous clock. I knew what to blame for this: Tinder.

Joining in the summer, it was all swipe, swipe, and swipe. The time had come, my friends had told me, to find "the one." After scrolling through thousands of self-indulgent selfies, I picked him. His brown hair shone like glistening chocolate and he had kind, warm eyes. He also had a dog. So he couldn't be too bad could he? It was his idea to carry a pink balloon so we could recognise each other amid the clatter, chaos and commuters of Waterloo.

He should have been here by now. When was the next train home? My train app told me: five minutes. Checking my watch for the gazillionth time, my face drained of colour as the minute hand struck five. Damn. We had agreed to meet at noon. It was around that time it all went wrong. It all happened so quickly. It wasn't really my fault, it was all just so weird. In the distance, towards the tickets machine, I could see a pink balloon bobbing along above the chattering crowd. Gulp.

"You can do this," I told myself.

"No, you can't," came a voice from somewhere inside my head.

Limping, the body holding the balloon came into focus like a lion in a hunter's gun. Slowly, very slowly, my eyes began to zoom in on a truly sick sight: it wasn't the boy in the photo.

Did I just say boy? It was a man. An old man. An old, bearded, repulsive man. Suddenly, he picked up his pace and walked towards me. I felt like the balloon he was holding and I was about to burst at any moment. I froze. The sensation of wanting to run away was so strong but I was a fly stuck in a gigantic cobweb. Moving closer, I noticed he sported a rat-like ponytail with food stained, sweaty clothes. What the hell was going on? Catfish, I thought. My head ached and my stomach rumbled loudly. For goodness sake Chloe, get a grip. I was just being melodramatic. He was probably nothing to do with me and just happened to have a balloon. It was probably for a cute little granddaughter. I needed to stop being so stupid. Suddenly, I felt a tap on my shoulder.

"What happened to your balloon?" the old man asked looking up. "You can touch mine if you want."

"Freak!" I screamed louder than I ever screamed in my life.

I pulled away from him and stumbled as I ran towards my platform. He shouted after me, but I didn't look back. I just sprinted and sprinted. I crashed into some people, knocking a boy over. I didn't care. Whistling loudly, the guard was closing the doors while ushering the final people on board. Swinging the door open with an extravagant flourish, like a cowboy about the swagger into a bar in a western, I leapt on board. As the train pulled away, I opened up my emergency mini bottle of whisky from my bag and took a huge swig.

"Chloe!"

I screeched so loudly the train jumped off the tracks. Tapping the window, the boy I knocked over was waving at me from the platform and pointing towards his grazed

Moderator-topics ,1920 Expository Discourse in Children, Adolescents, and Adults Marilyn A. Nippold,Cheryl M. Scott,2013-03-07 School success in the 21st century requires proficiency with expository discourse the use and understanding of informative language in spoken and written modalities This occurs for example when high school students read their textbooks and listen to their teachers lectures and later are asked to demonstrate their knowledge of this complex topic through oral reports and essay examinations Although many students are proficient with the expository genre others struggle to meet these expectations This book is designed to provide information on the use and understanding of expository discourse in school age children adolescents and young adults Recently researchers from around the world have been investigating the development of this genre in typical students and in those with language disorders Although many books have addressed the development of conversational and narrative discourse by comparison books devoted to the topic of expository discourse are sparse This crossdisciplinary volume fills that gap in the literature and makes a unique contribution to the study of language development and disorders It will be of interest to a range of professionals including speech language pathologists teachers linguists and psychologists who are concerned with language development and disorders
