In West Virginia yellow poplar Liriodendron tulipifera is abundant and is a prime candidate for increased utilization in a variety of manufacturing industries Computer simulations are a cost effective tool for estimating potential cutting yields from lumber They can be used to promote increased use of yellow poplar in the furniture cabinet and architectural woodworking industries and may also lead to increased utilization of the lower grades of lumber This paper describes the data collection methods and the format of the new West Virginia yellow poplar lumber defect database that was developed for use with computer simulation programs The database contains descriptions of 627 boards totaling approximately 3,800 board feet collected in West Virginia for grades FAS FASIF No 1 Common No 2A Common and No 28 Common S3

Forest Communities, Community Forests Jonathan Kusel, 2003-08-04 Forest Communities Community Forests is a collection of stories about twelve communities in the United States and their efforts to protect and restore their community forests It explores the struggles and opportunities faced by people as they work to invest in natural capital reverse decades of poor forest practices tackle policy gridlock and address community as well as ecological health The case studies are organized by the dominant themes in American community forestry today with the basic premise that healthy ecosystems depend on healthy communities and vice versa Unlike most studies of contemporary forestry Forest Communities Community Forests focuses on community well being and more generally community concerns While some recent studies have examined the environmental benefits of place based resource management or collaborative processes few have looked at community needs and concerns beyond the question of how to entice locals to comply with new forestry It is our hope that these case studies will convey the importance of community based forestry and contribute to the understanding and development and ultimately the success of new community based initiatives in the U S
