clarity and magnification. The fine reticles or crosshairs permit an unobstructed view of the target and facilitate exact placement of the sights on any portion of the target. The telescope that the Marine sniper will use is the Redfield 3x9 variable. It is a precision instrument of rugged construction and can be easily mounted on the sniper rifle.

(1) Optical System. --The optical system (see fig. 4) consists of an objective lens which produces, at focal plane "A," an image of the target which is upside down and backward. The erector system "looks at" this image and produces another image partially magnified at point "B," and returns the image to its correct position. The eyepiece lenses then magnify the true image for the eye to see.

(2) Resolving Power. --Resolving power is the ability of the eye to distinguish detail in ideal light. (See fig. 5.) The average unaided eye can distinguish 1-inch detail at 100 yards. Magnification, combined with good design of optics, permit resolution of this 1-inch divided by the magnification. Thus, a 1/4-inch detail can be seen with a 4X scope and 1/6-inch detail with a 6X. An object viewed from 600 yards through a 6X scope will have the same clarity as though viewed by the naked eye from 100 yards.

(3) Lens Coatings. --Lens surfaces are coated with a hard film of magnesium fluoride for maximum light transmission. Proper coating increases the transmission to at least 96%. With uncoated lenses, about 45% of the light entering the scope is lost.

(4) Exit Pupil. --The same circle of light seen in the eyepiece lens when a scope is held at arm's length is called the exit pupil. To allow for noncritical alignment of the eye on the scope axis when in an awkward or quick shooting position, the exit pupil should be slightly larger than the pupil of the human eye. This is known as "eye freedom."

(5) Field of View. --Field of view is the diameter of the picture seen through a scope and is usually expressed in "feet at hundreds of yards." (See fig. 6.) Generally, the higher the power, the smaller the field. While a wide field may help locate moving enemy more readily, there are practical limits. The widest fields are most frequently achieved at the expense of other desirable characteristics such as power magnification, eye relief,
