✓ Exclusively available on IvyPanda

Nora Jones is a 48-year-old Aboriginal lady who has been diagnosed with end stage kidney disease. She has been treated with haemodialysis for the past three months in a large Brisbane Hospital. Nora is from a remote Aboriginal Community and has been staying with her cousin between treatments but misses her home and her community.

Recently, Nora's community has been provided with a peritoneal dialysis clinic. In view of Nora's wish to return to her home, she has been offered the option to return to her community and commence peritoneal dialysis in place of haemodialysis. Even though the change in treatment will impact on her health outcomes, Nora has decided to return to her remote area home.

Effective communication and cultural safety are the key factors influencing the development of a nurse patient therapeutic relationship when working with Nora.

Personal rapport and trust relationship between Aboriginal Australians and non-Aboriginal nursing staff is important for enhancing the patients' understanding of significance of treatment in order to prevent their refusal from medical services. Nelson & Allison (2007) pointed at "the importance of devoting time specifically for building relationships, rather than being too quick to launch into the therapeutic activity" (p. 58). Due to their ethnical background and experience of racial discrimination, Indigenous patients feel uncomfortable being separated from their accustomed surrounding and put trust neither in non-Aboriginal nurses nor in medical services in general. Making efforts to establish a rapport with Nora, the medical staff should bear in mind that English might be her fourth or fifth language and this might complicate the process of communication significantly. "Many Indigenous patients were not properly prepared for surgery due to language difficulties. (Academic research library, 2008, p. 22).

Nora, as well as other Aboriginal patients, requires individual approach considering the differences in language skills and communication traditions. Another problem is caused with difficulties of receiving more or less certain feedback from Indigenous patients. They are inclined to agree to everything instead of asking questions and practice Claire Chambers, Elaine Ryder, 2018-10-11 The pursuit of excellent compassionate care should be at the heart of all practice. However, it can be challenging for practitioners to deliver this day after day in a context of tight budgets and targets which can erode the passion with which they entered their professions. Supporting Compassionate Healthcare Practice encourages healthcare professionals to look after themselves in order to maintain and develop their compassionate practice. This book considers how stress management, resilience, wellbeing, and positivity can help all health professionals remain close to the values, attitudes, and attributes that brought them into the caring professions. It presents and critiques the evidence base for these key concepts, bringing them to life with numerous case studies and examples, and develops a framework, RESPECT for practice. This innovative volume is essential reading for all healthcare students, academics, and professionals interested in improving both the quality of care and the wellbeing of patients and practitioners alike. Essentials of Mental Health Nursing Mr. Rohit Manglik, 2024-06-24 A core guide for nurses on psychiatric disorders, therapeutic communication, and mental health assessment and intervention. Textbook of Mental Health and Psychiatric Nursing: Principles and Practice Sailaxmi Gandhi, 2022-07-18 Textbook of Mental Health and Psychiatric Nursing contains clear, simple, and easy-to-understand descriptions of basic psychiatric and mental health nursing concepts, terminologies, various disorders, and psychiatric mental health nursing skills.
