Writing Academic Essays

Originally, the word essay (from an attempt or practice) is a form used to make a point of writing about specific subject, but it is more representative of what we learn because the process and performance of writing is what counts. That essay should be "trying out" ideas and arguments to see if they fit the required (teacher) topic (topic guide).

In practice, writing an essay usually involves responding to a question or topic. The writer reads the topic, then the title through to the end of the question. They can be quite complex and so it is important to read the question carefully. There are a number of questions that can be asked, and these are in the list below. In all cases, the writer is asked to write an essay, it is important that you develop the required skills.

The purpose of writing an academic essay is to provide a written account of your learning.

- 1. Research evidence
- 2. Select your topic (the topic is chosen by the student)
- 3. Select your topic (the topic is chosen by the student)
- 4. Select your topic (the topic is chosen by the student)
