

The background of the entire image is a dark, moody sky with soft, grey clouds. In the center, there is a black silhouette of a person, possibly a warrior or a knight, standing on a dark, rounded mound. The person is facing away from the viewer, looking towards the right. They are holding a long sword or staff diagonally across their back, with the hilt in their right hand and the tip pointing towards the upper left. The person's legs are spread apart in a wide, stable stance.

Reflections Donna Hayes, 2014-10-31 If you d told Donna M Hayes that one day she would drug and kidnap her mother she wouldn t have dignified you with a response And yet when faced with an insidious enemy Alzheimer s which has set up camp in her mother s mind Donna and her brother do just that Over the eight years that Donna serves as her mother s caregiver and advocate she is forced to battle through numerous conflicts on various fronts including fighting for her own mental and emotional health her marriage and her faith in God In Reflections Donna offers a candid account of what life is like for the caregiver of someone suffering from Alzheimer s disease She recounts her struggles with guilt her desperate cries for help God s silence and her loneliness and growing despair But though hers is a story of loss it is not a tale of woe As Donna continues to fight for her mother while fighting against her mother s disease the seed of hope takes root in her heart Written for caregivers by one who has survived the trenches Reflections points you to the hope that will guide you through your darkest days

The Problem of Alzheimer's Jason Karlawish, 2021-02-23 A definitive and compelling book on one of today s most prevalent illnesses In 2020 an estimated 5.8 million Americans had Alzheimer s and more than half a million died because of the disease and its devastating complications 16 million caregivers are responsible for paying as much as half of the 226 billion annual costs of their care As more people live beyond their seventies and eighties the number of patients will rise to an estimated 13.8 million by 2050 Part case studies part meditation on the past present and future of the disease The Problem of Alzheimer s traces Alzheimer s from its beginnings to its recognition as a crisis While it is an unambiguous account of decades of missed opportunities and our health care systems failures to take action it tells the story of the biomedical breakthroughs that may allow Alzheimer s to finally be prevented and treated by medicine and also presents an argument for how we can live with dementia the ways patients can reclaim their autonomy and redefine their sense of self how families can support their loved ones and the innovative reforms we can make as a society that would give caregivers and patients better quality of life Rich in science history and characters The Problem of Alzheimer s takes us inside laboratories patients homes caregivers support groups progressive care communities and Jason Karlawish s own practice at the Penn Memory Center people with a foreign background whose care needs have increased at different rates Migration does not only mean moving from one place to another it also involves the transition of an individual's lifestyle, life views, social and economic adjustments that may lead to certain changes. These transitions from the old to the new way of life and from a life without dementia to a life with dementia involve making sense of life's changes.

Aim The aim of study I was to explore the experiences and perceptions of dementia among Iranian staff working in a culturally profiled nursing home (CPNH). The aim of studies II and III was to explore relatives' decisions to end caregiving at home and Iranian families' and relatives' attitudes towards CPNHs in Sweden. The aim of study IV was to explore how the residents with dementia at the CPNH expressed the feeling of home.

Method This thesis is based on more than one year's fieldwork. The empirical material is based on interviews and observations. Three groups of participants were interviewed and observed: 10 people with dementia, 20 family caregivers and relatives (II and III respectively), and 34 staff members (I). The interviews were conducted in Persian, Farsi, Azerbaijani, English, and Swedish. The choice of language was always up to the participants. All the interviews were audio recorded, transcribed verbatim in the respective languages, and then translated later into Swedish. The analysis of the material was based on content analysis blended with ethnography.

Results Study I shows that people from different cultural and linguistically diverse backgrounds could have different perceptions of what dementia entails. A lack of knowledge concerning dementia affects how staff approach these people. Study II shows that the CPNH is crucial when deciding to cease caregiving at home. It is important to ensure that relatives with dementia are cared for by someone who speaks the same mother tongue. The results indicate that positive feelings of relief or comfort are dominant responses among the participants, some of whom even feel pride in the high standard of care provided by the home. In Study III, most participants based their views on a comparison between the CPNH and Iranian nursing homes after the Islamic Revolution. Negative views of the nursing home were evaluated alongside what the respondents considered to be typically Iranian. In Study IV, the results show that people with dementia's personal experiences of home played a great role, and although none of the participants felt at home, all of them stated that the CPNH was a place to live in.

Conclusion Perceptions of dementia can be based on cultural and traditional understanding, although this can shift through transition and knowledge accumulation. A lack of knowledge concerning dementia and residents' sociocultural background, generational differences, and incoherence aligned with staff members' different sociocultural backgrounds created many challenges. The staff wanted to learn more about dementia to be able to manage daily communication with the residents. On another point, the staff admitted that only being able to speak a person's native language was not enough to claim that they were actually communicating. Family caregivers' decisions to end caregiving at home involve mutuality, capability, and management, but decision making sometimes has nothing to do with violating a person's autonomy and is more about protecting the person. The family caregivers do care for frail elderly family members. What has changed due to a transition is the structure and construction of family caregiving. The consequences of communication difficulties between staff and the residents have led to a small degree of social involvement which in turn affects residents daily social state Overall many family members stated that the CPNH resembled Iran too much which disturbed them The residents thought of home as a geographical location but also connected it with both positive and negative feelings Furthermore the CPNH reminded some of the residents of the nicer side of life back home in Iran while for others it brought back sad experiences and memories from the past Nevertheless the nursing home due to memories and experiences of life in Iran home was a place to be and to live pathographies highlights the assumptions attitudes and myths that people bring to the medical encounter One factor emerges again and again in these case studies the tendency in contemporary medical practice to focus primarily not on the needs of the individual who is sick but on the condition that we call disease Pathography allows the individual person a voice one that asserts the importance of the experiential side of illness and thus restores the feeling thinking experiencing human being to the center of the medical enterprise Recommended for medical practitioners the clergy caregivers students of popular culture and the general reader Reconstructing Illness demonstrates that only when we hear both the doctor s and the patient s voice will we have a medicine that is truly human     Legislative Calendar United States.
