Polders: Land from the Sea

(pages 282–283)

How did the Dutch get more land?

The Dutch needed land for their growing population. So they reclaimed land from the sea. To do this, the Dutch built dikes, earthen banks to hold back the sea. Then they drained the water off the land. Land that is reclaimed by diking and drainage is a polder.

At least 40 percent of the Netherlands was once under the sea. Because of this, much of the Netherlands is below sea level. As a result, if a dike breaks, the sea floods in and causes destruction.

The Dutch erected seaworks. These are structures that help reduce the destruction that the sea causes. The seaworks include dikes and terpen. Terpen are high earthen platforms that are safe places to go during floods and high tides.

Over the centuries, the Dutch found ways to make dikes stronger. They also learned to control water in low-lying lands. One way was to pump water from the land. In the 1400s, the Dutch added windmills to power the pumps. Today, electric motors power the pumps.

The Dutch also changed their environment by changing the Zuider Zee. This was once an arm of the North Sea. Now it is a freshwater lake. The idea was first proposed in 1667. In the 1800s and 1900s, the Dutch finally made a plan to build dikes all the way across the entrance to the Zuider Zee. The dikes stopped saltwater from flowing into that body of water. In time, it became a freshwater lake called IJsselmeer. The land around the lake was drained. This created several polders that added hundreds of square miles to the Netherlands.

A History of Tourism in Africa Todd Cleveland,2021-02-23 An engaging social history of foreign tourists dreams the African tourism industry's efforts to fulfill them and how both sides affect each other Since the nineteenth century foreign tourists and resident tourism workers in Africa have mutually relied upon notions of exoticism but from vastly different perspectives Many of the countless tourists who have traveled to the African continent fail to acknowledge or even realize that skilled African artists in the tourist industry repeatedly manufacture authentic experiences in order to fulfill foreigners often delusional or at least uninformed expectations These carefully nurtured and controlled performances typically reinforce tourists reductive impressions formed over centuries of the continent its peoples and even its wildlife. In turn, once back in their respective homelands, tourists' accounts of their travels often substantiate and thereby reinforce prevailing stereotypes of exotic Africa. Meanwhile, Africans staged performances not only impact their own lives primarily by generating remunerative opportunities but also subject the continent's residents to objectification, exoticization, and myriad forms of exploitation.

Drugs and Popular Culture Paul Manning, 2013-01-11. The use of illegal drugs is so common that a number of commentators now refer to the normalisation of drug consumption. It is surprising, then, that to date very little academic work has explored drug use as part of contemporary popular culture. This collection of readings will apply an innovative, multi-disciplinary approach to this theme, combining some of the most recent research on the normalisation thesis with fresh work on the relationship between drug use and popular culture. In drawing upon criminological, sociological, and cultural studies approaches, this book will make an important contribution to the newly emerging field positioned at the intersection of these disciplines. The particular focus of the book is upon drug consumption as popular culture. It aims to provide an accessible collection of chapters and readings that will explore drug use in popular culture in a way that is relevant to undergraduates and postgraduates studying a variety of courses, including criminology, sociology, media studies, health care, and social work.
