Preservatives in Historic Structures Stan T. Lebow,2012 This document provides guidance on wood preservation options in the context of historic preservation Preserving wooden building materials is critical to historic preservation practitioners Biodeterioration can be minimized through design construction practices maintenance and if necessary by use of wood preservatives Moisture is the primary cause of biodeterioration and if exposure to moisture cannot be prevented the application of preservatives or use of pressure treated wood may be warranted The Secretary of Interior s Standards for the Treatment of Historic Properties emphasize retaining the historic character of a property including distinctive materials features and spatial relationships Existing conditions should be carefully evaluated to determine the appropriate level of intervention Wood preservatives are generally grouped into two categories preservatives used for in place field remedial treatment and preservatives used for pressure treatments A limitation of in place treatments is that they cannot be forced deeply into the wood under pressure However they can be applied into the center of large wooden members via treatment holes These preservatives may be available as liquids rods or pastes Pressure treated wood has much deeper and more uniform preservative penetration than wood treated with other methods The type of pressure treated wood is often dependent on the requirements of the specific application To guide selection of pressure treated wood the American Wood Protection Association developed Use Category System standards Other preservative characteristics such as color odor and surface oiliness may also be relevant Guidelines for selection and application of field treatments and for selection and specification of pressure treated wood are provided in this document

Historic Structures Stan LeBow,Ronald W. Anthony,2012-12-13 NOTE NO FURTHER DISCOUNT FOR THIS PRINT PRODUCT OVERSTOCK SALE Significantly reduced list price Wood preservatives are generally grouped into two categories preservatives used for in place field remedial treatment and preservatives used for pressure treatments A limitation of in place treatments is that they cannot be forced deeply into the wood under pressure However they can be applied into the center of large wooden members via treatment holes. These preservatives may be available as liquids, rods, or pastes. Pressure-treated wood has much deeper and more uniform preservative penetration than wood treated with other methods. The type of pressure-treated wood is often dependent on the requirements of the specific application. To guide selection of pressure-treated wood, the American Wood Protection Association developed Use Category System standards. Other preservative characteristics such as color, odor, and surface oiliness may also be relevant. Guidelines for selection and application of field treatments and for selection and specification of pressure-treated wood are provided in this document.

A Manual of Machinery and Millwork William John Macquorn Rankine, 1873

Guide to Effective Monitoring of Aquatic and Riparian Resources, 2004. This monitoring plan for aquatic and riparian resources was developed in response to monitoring needs addressed in the Biological Opinions for bull trout (U.S. Department of the Interior Fish and Wildlife Service 1998) and steelhead (U.S. Department of Commerce National Marine Fisheries Service). It provides a consistent framework for implementing the effectiveness monitoring of aquatic and riparian resources within the range of the Pacific Anadromous Fish Strategy (PACFISH) and the Inland Fish Strategy (INFISH). The primary objective is to evaluate the effect of land management activities on aquatic and riparian communities at multiple scales and to determine whether PACFISH/INFISH management practices are effective in maintaining or improving the structure and function of riparian and aquatic conditions at both the landscape and watershed scales on Federal lands throughout the upper Columbia River Basin. A list of attributes thought to be important in defining aquatic and riparian habitat conditions and their relationship with listed species were identified. The list of attributes was then translated into measurable criteria and compiled to form sampling protocols for both stream channel parameters (Part II) and vegetation parameters (Part III). These sampling methods were tested for variability and the results are documented in two other publications: Testing Common Stream Sampling Methods for Broad Scale Long Term
