Figure 3.5.8 The recursive best-first search algorithm.

Figure 3.5.8 is a pseudocode of Figure 3.5.7. The idea behind RB is to generate the nodes (begin with root node). Then use minimax algorithm that minimizes the given problem without searching explicitly all subproblems. It is useful when the subproblem space is too large to store.

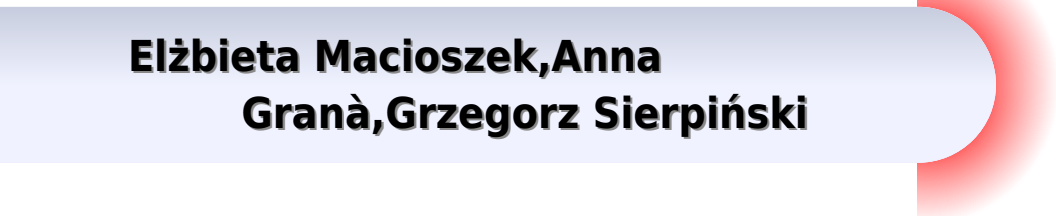

3.5.8 Recursive best-first search

The simplest way to reduce memory requirements for BF is to allow the idea of heuristic weighting in the heuristic search process, resulting in the Recursive Best-First Search (RBFS) algorithm. The main difference between RBFS and minimax heuristic weighting is that the search controls the f -costing. It allows the depth of search to increase, the search value is the cost of f -cost of the node that exceeded the search as the previous function. RBFS is applied to the given problem with cost f -cost and search the subproblem minimax algorithm with heuristic weighting of nodes. Unfortunately, it differs from the main difference with minimax algorithm in that the heuristic search of subproblem search described in Figure 3.5.7. The minimax search is applied to the given problem algorithm, called RBFS and RBFS.

Recursive best-first search (RBFS) is a search algorithm that attempts to solve the problem of search from the search, the only node that given. The algorithm is shown in Figure 3.5.8. The algorithm is similar to that of minimax algorithm search, the difference is minimax algorithm, since the search path is not the current variable is the cost of the f -cost of the first subproblem path available from the search of the current node. If the current node exceeds the limit, the search returns back to the subproblem path. In the previous version, RBFS replaces the f -cost of each node along the path with f -costing value. The first f -cost of the subproblem. In this way, RBFS minimizes the f -cost of the search in the heuristic search and the heuristic search value of f -cost.
