

Generally, the authoritative nature of my mom impacted me positively. I realized the importance of doing the right thing and the consequences of doing the wrong things. Moreover, the parenting style boosted my self-esteem because, to date, I feel good whenever I accomplish something. I learned that there are rules that need to be followed for one to succeed in life. This parenting type impacted my academic and social life. I ended up getting excellent grades and many friends through interactions and socializations. Authoritative parenting style does not instill a sense of independence while the permissive parenting style equips one with a knowledge of freedom (Martinez et al., 2019). Having experienced both parenting styles, I believe I was brought up properly. This is because what authoritative parenting lacked, permissive parenting had and vice versa. Today, I am the right person, all thanks to my parents, who brought me up in the best possible manner.
