

Abstract APA: The Ethical Dilemma of Abortion

Abstract

The subject of abortion is a very delicate topic since it touches on moral, religious, and ideological points. People all over the world have different opinions about this. Abortions can be characterized as a spontaneous abortion which is unexpected, or an abortion by choice.

In this ethical dilemma, two patients both experience an abortion resulting in sorrow and distress after their loss. One patient chooses at 16 weeks she no longer wants a baby and has a saline abortion. The other patient has been struggling to get pregnant and has been involved in the in-vitro fertilization program at the hospital, and she loses the baby to a spontaneous abortion at 24 weeks.

The nurse is faced with which patient needs her most as they are both upset and struggling to sleep. Both women have lost something, despite how, and need the support of their nurse. Should both of these patients be on the same unit? Should the nurse be assigned to take care of both patients at the same time? These are some of the questions we are faced with when we are placed in these difficult circumstances.

Introduction

The ethical debate about abortion today is a continuing struggle to answer the questions of when life begins and to determine does the fetus have rights when abortion is morally justified. Minors should have the right to abortion without parental consent or awareness.

The difficulty in answering these questions has split individuals into two categories, pro-life and pro-choice. Most people express their views somewhere between these two extremes. Due to the strong opinions of some, these argument has led to violence in some areas of the United States, resulting in decreased availability or biased opinions in some cases (Zerwekh, 2015).

In this case study, we are talking about two different types of abortions, a saline abortion, and a spontaneous abortion. A saline abortion is well known among the pro-life movement. This process includes the installation of substances such as saline, digoxin, potassium chloride, or prostaglandins that are injected into a mother's womb, specifically directly into the amniotic sac (C.F., 2016).

Many people find this to be disturbing because the baby is poisoned and essentially chemically burned from the inside out. It takes about an hour for the fetus to die. This process also induces contractions resulting in the mother giving birth to a dead baby about a day later. Today, this type of abortion is rarely performed because of its high failure rate when babies are born alive.

A spontaneous abortion is the loss of a fetus without outside intervention, normally before 20 weeks of gestation. Spontaneous abortion can be characterized into different categories, such as threatened, inevitable, missed, complete, and incomplete, depending on certain circumstances (Griebel, 2005).
