

The Causes And Effects Of Bullying

Among the most common and neglected problems in the world, bullying is on top of the list. It is a terrible and dangerous act that occurs in numerous places, from homes, schools, workplaces, to the internet (cyber-bullying). According to NCAB (National Centre Against Bullying), the definition of bullying is when an individual or a group of people with more power, repeatedly cause hurt or harm to another person or group of people who feel helpless to respond. Common acts of bullying include: teasing, insults, name-calling, provoking, threats, taunting, and it can get physical by beating or stealing. In order to fully understand this issue, one should take a look, and address the underlying reasons and causes why one becomes a bully at the first place, and what its effects can be. Neglect and insecurity can make a person wants to bully others; but the victim can get seriously hurt, and this can lead to serious problems: like depression, and poor performance in academia, or life in general.

One of the root causes, and the most important one in my opinion, is the family life and how things are at home. If a child is growing up in a dysfunctional family, with abusive parents, who fight all the time, no one wants to hear or support them, it's sufficient to make the child feel unloved and not important, leading them to become angry and insecure individuals later on. Jealousy, attention-seeking, low self-esteem, stress and traumas are other causes for bullying. Regardless of the reasons, at the end of the day the bully him or herself is solely responsible. It is a very dangerous act, as it can lead to numerous serious and extensive effects.

Side effects range all the way from poor appetite and non-stop crying, to suicidal tendencies. Excerpted from "Bullying"

Brookings Papers on Education Policy: 2003 Diane Ravitch,2010-12-01 In 1983 the seminal report issued by the National Commission on Excellence in Education A Nation at Risk charged that most American high schoolers were following a general course of instruction choosing neither the college preparatory track nor the vocational option This pattern the report complained had fostered low expectations and a curricular hodge podge of classes that failed to prepare students for college or work The commission called on states to implement academic requirements for all students regardless of background including four years of English and three years each of science mathematics and social studies Students should not be sorted by their presumed future destinations the commission reasoned but should be offered an equal opportunity to get a high quality education to fit them either for postsecondary education or the modern workplace

Two decades after the commission called on states to reform the high school environment and raise graduation requirements the Brown Center on Education Policy at the Brookings Institution convened a group of prominent scholars to explore the current state of America's high schools focusing on new research about reforming these institutions that are so important in the lives of the nation's adolescents. The questions considered reflected the diversity of the participants and covered a variety of areas: historical, international, sociological, and practical. Data gathered by the U.S. Department of Education show students today are taking many more advanced courses in mathematics and the sciences while at the same time test scores do not reflect the increases in enrollments in academic courses. In addition, large score gaps remain among students from different social groups. Reform of the high schools must take into account the elementary and middle schools that prepare students and the postsecondary institutions to which students aspire. Adolescent culture and students' views about school and academic work play important roles in student achievement as do the family and contemporary society in shaping of adolescent behavior. No matter their background, all participants agreed that the key to a successful high school rests with the extent to which it recognizes and strengthens its commitment to the intellectual growth of its students. The
