Questions

- 1) Summarize the example of phenotypic and molecular complete dominance
 - a) PCD is fairly obvious as the effects of only one allele is seen within the phenotype. Such as a flower with alleles for red or white being completely red. Dominance on the molecular level is seen with a protein that catalyzes, or speeds up, a specific biochemical reaction without changing the nature of the reaction.
 - b) Phenotypic complete dominance is when one phenotype is completely dominant over the other recessive phenotype. Molecular complete dominance
- 2) What is the difference between haploinsufficiency and a dominant negative mutation?
 - a) Haploinsufficiency is when one copy of a gene is inactivated or deleted and the remaining functional copy of the gene is not adequate to produce the needed gene product to preserve normal function/phenotype. Dominant negative on the other hand, is when the function of a wild-type allele is impaired by a co-expressed mutant variant of the same gene product.
 - b) Haploinsufficiency is when the heterozygote is not enough to produce the wildtype phenotype. The heterozygote is not able to produce enough gene product for dominant phenotype. Occurs when only one single copy of the gene is functional.
 - i) Dominant negative is when a mutant reduces the activity of the protein
- 3) Describe incomplete dominance in snapdragons
 - a) Incomplete dominance in snapdragons can be seen through their intermediate pink. For these flowers, they are white or red in their homozygous forms and orange when heterozygous. This occurs because of dosage since one allele of red isn't enough to fulfill the pigment needed to red.
 - b) amazing
- 4) Give the genotype and phenotype for the blood groups: A, B, AB, and O
 - a) A: I^A/I^A or I^A/i , B: I^B/I^B or I^B/i , AB: I^A/I^B , O: ii
 - i) There are three total alleles at play here. The A and B alleles are both fully expressed in the heterozygous version, thus codominance.
 - ii) Positive or negative is characterized by Rh factor-an allele that is either + or -. The positive version of this allele is positive.
 - b) A: $I^A I^A$ or $I^A i$, B: $I^B I^B$ or $I^B i$, AB: A: $I^A I^B$ O: ii
- 5) How does the sickle cell trait give us insight to the difficulties categorizing interactions?
 - a) Unfortunately, those who are heterozygous to the sickle cell trait still have sickle cells. The quantity is just not large enough to pose real threat to the individual. This is difficult because this doesn't show complete dominance. More accurately, the alleles are codominant.
 - i) When categorizing interactions, it's very important to take note of the level you are looking at, as it may give different results.
 - b) People heterozygous for sickle cell have the genes for the disease but not in a great enough quantity to affect the individual negatively. In fact, the individual gets the benefit of malaria prevention as well and normal cell function. This causes difficulties because it is not completely dominant. It is codominant because one allele will produce healthy
