

Supervised Classification in ERDAS IMAGINE using WorldView-2 imagery

Introduction

WorldView-2 is the first commercial high-resolution satellite to provide eight spectral sensors in the visible to near-infrared range. Each sensor is narrowly focused on a particular range of the electromagnetic spectrum that is sensitive to a particular feature on the ground, or a property of the atmosphere. Together they are designed to improve the segmentation and classification of land and aquatic features beyond any other space-based remote sensing platform. Figure.1 illustrates the bands of DigitalGlobe's satellite constellation and where they fall in the visible spectrum (Units are in nanometers). It's important to note that the additional bands provide more coverage over the spectrum thus providing more information.

The increased spectral fidelity of WorldView-2, combined with very high spatial resolution, will provide the additional data necessary to address the feature classification challenge. For example, when looking at land classes, WorldView-2 is expected to deliver a 10-30% improvement in accuracy compared with traditional VNIR imagery overall.

More information of the benefits of the eight spectral bands of WorldView-2 can be found at <http://www.digitalglobe.com/sites/default/files/DG-8SPECTRAL-WP-WEB.pdf>
