■ ■ ■ Stuttering begins as the child begins to use the mother's language. It is not a disorder, but a phase that most children go through. The mother's role is to provide a supportive environment and to encourage the child to communicate. The mother should not try to correct the child's stuttering, but rather should focus on the child's message and respond accordingly. The mother should also model fluent speech and provide a calm, relaxed atmosphere for communication.
