PPR PRACTICE QUESTIONS WITH COMP 1-13 - correct answer Answers

COMPETENCY 008

1. Which of the following strategies is most appropriate for assisting English-language learners (ELLs) at the beginning level of proficiency with reading content-specific material?

- A. Providing instruction on text-based academic vocabulary prior to reading
- B. Requiring students to develop outlines of the text in English while reading
- C. Having students read content material aloud in groups with other ELLs
- D. Providing students with parallel texts in English and their native language - correct answer Option A - is correct because providing instruction on content-specific vocabulary has been proven to help both ELLs and native speakers acquire new vocabulary and comprehend content instruction. Option B is incorrect because note taking is not appropriate for beginning ELLs, as they lack the language skills to take notes in a second language. Option C is incorrect because ELLs at this level will most likely lack the language skills to comprehend content-specific texts. Option D is incorrect because although providing information in students' native language may help with their content knowledge, it will not help them with language acquisition.
