algorithms and are useful in many applications. We can think of a search tree as a backward-chaining search using depth-first search. That is, starting with the goal, we first try to find a way to achieve the goal. If we fail, we try to find a way to achieve the goal by achieving the goal's preconditions. This is the approach taken by depth-first programming systems, which use efficient storage and retrieval mechanisms to perform computations. Using logic programming combines the good ideas of backward-chaining with the forward-programming efficiency of forward-chaining. It is also simpler, the branching factor being small, which means that the programmer need not write too many extra rules. It is still possible to get an infinite loop with predicate the function call, but this can be a potentially infinite number of steps.

9.4.1 Backward-chaining of finding

Finding can be done in many ways, as discussed in Section 9.4.1. The naive method is to try all possible ways to find a goal. This is not a good idea, and many good ideas exist to do better.
