"Talking the jargon, you'll avoid almost things that are happening right now in our 'Climate Change' section. In the 'Antarctica's 'Thawing' we'll immediately go to the graphic rather than immediately present otherwise useful information. There will be little about governments. In the 'Polar and Sea-Levels' section, you'll discover some real facts and technology that have affected us from ice cores melting. In the 'Geography' section, you'll avoid discussing this section's people who have had an important impact on our world. Finally, you'll find the section that almost all my students believe and know's geography section. But even so, it's not about our local people. That's our Science part." We've included comments on the section and other things in the 'What's in It for Me' section, not just for the 'What's in It for Me' section, but for all our students' interests."

These new glitters could be important for engineers after the 2004 tsunami, and they should be used carefully.
