TEK (RS)- will be tested (65%) (SS)- may be tested (35%)	Key Ideas
7A analyze and evaluate how evidence of common ancestry among groups is provided by the fossil record, biogeography, and homologies, including anatomical, molecular, and developmental	Evidence of Common Ancestry Among Groups (Theory that all organisms are descended from the same ancestor) I. Fossil record A variety of organisms that have existed at different times, including very simple, ancient species and the eventual arrival of more varied and complex species II. Biogeography Geographic distribution of organisms (species that live in the same area are more closely related, but related species can also be found living far apart) III. Homologies A. Anatomical Homologies Structural similarities (like bones in a bird's wing and the human arm) that serve a different purpose for each species. B. Molecular Homologies Molecular similarities among organisms (the genomes for humans and chimpanzees are about 99% identical) C. Developmental Homologies Embryonic similarities among certain organisms show how some organisms develop in common ways (vertebrate embryos have gill pouches that later develop into gills or Eustachian tubes)
B.7.E analyze and evaluate the relationship of natural selection to adaptation and to the development of diversity in and among species	Evolution is the process through which species change over time. - Natural Selection is a theory proposed by Charles Darwin that explains how evolution occurs. It proposes that those individuals in a population that are better adapted to their environment are more likely to survive and reproduce. - Inherited variations are differences in traits of individuals of the same species. - Adaptation is a trait that increases an organism's chances of survival in its environment, such as white fur increasing an organism's chances of survival in a snow-covered environment.
B.8.B categorize organisms using a hierarchical classification system based on	How do scientists categorize organisms? Scientists may use several ways to categorize organisms. It depends if they are looking at a group of organisms or an individual organism. They may use the following: - Cladogram- a diagram that shows relationships among groups of organisms - Dichotomous key- determine the identity of a single organism
