True/False questions

(a) False

Demand should be distinguished from wants. Unlike wants, demand has to be backed up by buying power, i.e. the consumer should have the means to purchase the good or service to demand it.

(b) True

A consumer should want to buy product and have the means to be able to buy it, then we say the consumer has a demand for a product.

(c) False

To determine if there is a high demand for chicken burgers in a specific area it is necessary to determine if consumers want to buy it (i.e. if they like to buy chicken burgers) and if they have the means, i.e. adequate income, to purchase the chicken burgers.

Choose the correct answer

1. (i)

Only the price of ice cream determines the quantity of ice cream demanded. The income of households and the taste and preferences for ice cream, will affect the demand for ice cream (i.e. the position of the demand for ice cream function – this is covered in the next section, 3.2.3) but not the quantity demanded of ice cream. The availability of ice cream will affect the supply of ice cream, but only if we know the quantities of ice cream that will be available at different prices (you will learn about this in section 3.3). For now it is important that you recognize that the only factor that determine the quantity of ice cream demanded is the price of ice cream.
