

Capturing Memories to Last a Day

I met Lindsay in geometry class at sophomore year. We started getting to know each other and found that we were taking the same photography class as well as the same dancing and writing. Every day we got to know each other more and more and began bonding. We would draw pictures together and take small sketches of our our walls notes. Many times, our math teacher would yell at us for not paying attention in class but drawing together was the highlight of that math class. When we found out we were in the same photography class we would practice taking photos of each other and practiced for projects to come. Lindsay and I started to become each other's friends that we hung out together everyday, which is what I wanted to get involved to the people Lindsay hung out with. There where no real lies.

One was always on top but didn't take any pictures with me and senior year. At times of a small thing with each other everyday and had some fun time for the day. In those small moments and was the happiest and take some cool photos which started to become a new trend for hanging out. We took photos of the graffiti down path, (Landscape like, some abandoned buildings, and recorded the outdoors for our falls or grassy fields. Some people may argue that hanging out your phone while hanging out with friends before the picture of even hanging out at all but taking photos was the foundation of our friendship.

Not only did these photographs document our memories we made together, but it also showed us to not let our creative juices flow. We'd all take turns getting the right composition and interest in our photos and with these different photographs everyone would post their favorite and post them to Instagram. Instagram is interesting because you're able to see what someone else takes pictures of without they allow them. Even if Lindsay, Ryan, and I had some photographs the process of creating the overall theme was so different and personal. My photos would turn out more natural and with dark while Lindsay's there included overexposed and reflected a vintage idea, and Ryan's theme incorporated more black, white and grey. Each of us had a different style in our photographs which showed how all photography is different whether it be cause of the subject matter or the style.

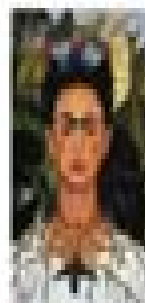

On one photo of Lindsay, Ryan, and I took, we headed to the playground in my town. We were going on a mission to take photos since the lighting was perfect just around town. We observed the location and hoped out where we'd take the photos. That the best photo is we would walk back along the photo and with different poses. Since we were all aware of composition and lighting from our art classes, we were able to take some pretty nice photos. Some photos were the typical group photo, like the photo that had Ryan, while others were candid, like the photo Ryan had with me standing in a grassy area, and Lindsay was more candid, sitting on the fountain. All these photos were taken in the same environment but through the editing, pose and processes we used, our individuality shined through.

Lindsay, Ryan, and I continued to take photographs and continued to bonded over art up until senior year which is when we had taken. Mixed in together, where we talked more about art. At the end of senior year when we had to choose colleges, Lindsay and Ryan chose Western Michigan while Lindsay, Ryan, and I chose Michigan State University. Although they're two hours away and in completely new environments culturally to us, we still share photographs as they will ask for updates on how to create an interesting style within the photo. Photography is a hobby that doesn't necessarily need to be formal. Lindsay, Ryan, and I took photos with our phones in a casual and fun way. Many photographers focus on events like weddings to take pictures of while others take candid photos of strangers. Some photographers may carry new cameras while others use old cameras or in this case, we used our phones. These poses showed us to share with Lindsay while we were hanging out and also recorded our memories in our own styles. Especially now that we all live in different states, when we look at these poses we'll think back to the times where we had longer talking and how we started our friendship.

Frida Kahlo: Artist Influence

While what we wanted to focus on and look at others. The mural is famous artist, Diego

Rivera who she later found to be abusive, creating a rocky relationship. Most of her paintings feature symbols that were connected to her current situation. Kahlo was considered a surrealist painter because of her vividness and disturbing concepts she incorporated in her work. The result was her personal experiences to reach out to her audience. I mean her work because without writing about other people's emotions, she expressed her feelings in her paintings and allowed what she wanted to address. In "Self-Portrait With Thorn Necklace and Broken Heart" Kahlo painted objects that had meaning to her and expressed her emotion through the visual in her face. Her paintings were her outlet and release from her pain that she suffered physically and mentally and through this, she was able to create a name for herself.

Throughout Kahlo's collection of pieces, she conveyed a sense of struggle in her own surrealist style. Her paintings included personal feelings resulting for health and physical issues addressing war and her culture. Her paintings together could be considered a timeline. The small part things as they occurred, her paintings that focused on her health explored the more symptoms that were on with her condition which included her back issues, her longing for a child, and as she grew older, her being bedridden and her loneliness. Kahlo's other paintings were greatly "influenced by indigenous Mexican culture..." which included her specific symbols she included in her work and the use of color. Biography of Frida Kahlo. Through Kahlo's symbols elements contained in her paintings, she was able to express and share her feelings.

Frida Kahlo is most known for her symbolic elements in her work. One famous piece she worked on was called "Self-Portrait With Thorn Necklace and Broken Heart" where she included specific symbols and composition the piece that express her emotions. The monkey is included in many works from to Kahlo which symbolizes protection and security. The black cat represents death and how it haunts her when dealing with her illness. The dove, is the source used for "Gloria"
