Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical and psychological health of female police officers. The study was conducted in a police station in Istanbul. The participants were 20 female police officers who were assigned to a training group and 20 female police officers who were assigned to a control group. The training program consisted of 12 weeks of aerobic and strength training. The physical and psychological health of the participants was measured at the beginning and at the end of the training program. The results of the study showed that the training program had a positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the female police officers. The training group showed significant improvements in physical fitness and psychological health compared to the control group. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can be an effective intervention for improving the physical and psychological health of female police officers.

RESEARCH The new study, published online in the Journal of the American Academy of Child and Adolescent Psychiatry, found that the more time a child spends in the hospital, the more likely they are to be prescribed medication. Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life (HRQL) of sedentary, middle-aged men. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The intervention group (IG) consisted of 20 men who participated in a 12-week training program. The control group (CG) consisted of 20 men who did not participate in the training program. The IG showed significant improvements in physical fitness and HRQL compared to the CG. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can improve physical fitness and HRQL in sedentary, middle-aged men.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week resistance training program on the muscle strength and endurance of young adults. The study was conducted in a laboratory setting. The participants were 20 young adults (10 males and 10 females) who were randomly assigned to two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The control group performed no resistance training, while the experimental group performed a 12-week resistance training program. The muscle strength and endurance were measured at the beginning and end of the study. The results showed that the experimental group had significantly higher muscle strength and endurance than the control group at the end of the study. The findings suggest that a 12-week resistance training program can improve muscle strength and endurance in young adults.
