Churchill, 2016-10-29 Well I must confess that even after war has been declared the skies haven't fallen and oysters taste just the same I never would have dreamed that so big a step would be accepted with so much equanimity It is due to two causes I think First because we have trembled on the verge so long and sort of dabbled our toes in the water that our minds have grown gradually accustomed to what under other circumstances would be a violent shock Second because the individual units of the Navy are so well prepared that there is little to do We made a few minor changes in the routine and slipped the war heads on to the torpedoes and presto we were ready for war One beauty of a destroyer is that life on board being reduced to its simplest terms anyhow there is little to change We may be ordered to strip that is go to our Navy yard and land all combustibles paints oils surplus woodwork etc but we have not done so yet Third-Fourth years of the war Edward Alfred Pollard, 1866 The Last Year of the War Edward Alfred Pollard, 1866 War-related Civilian Problems in Indochina United States.
