Symons, R. B. Schainker, Electrochemical Engineering Consultants Inc, 1991 PRESTO Digital Computer Code User's Guide. Volume I. System Overview BOEING AEROSPACE CO SEATTLE WA., 1977 PRESTO an integrated system of computer codes has been developed for the PREMPT program to perform EMP response analysis of communications systems Volume One of the PRESTO User's Guide presents an overview of the entire PRESTO system and an introduction to the material contained in the other volumes two through six of the PRESTO User's Guide series PRESTO provides engineering users with a tool for expeditiously analyzing electronic systems to determine electromagnetic pulse

EMP effects It is expected that users have a basic knowledge of digital computer usage including FORTRAN PRESTO consists of three groups of codes an executive code application codes and a modeling library The executive code provides the interface between the engineering user and the application programs which perform the calculations requested by the user The modeling library contains subroutines used to model the electromagnetic response of signal cables power systems and ground systems PRESTO interprets the user input performs the required computation and generates the output specified by the user A modular approach is used in PRESTO to achieve maximum flexibility The modularity of PRESTO and the independence of the executive control program facilitates the incorporation of additional application codes and modeling libraries applicable to system analyses other than for EMP effects

Reacting Flow Computer Code (ICOMFLO) ,1997 A copyrighted computational fluid dynamics computer code ICOMFLO has been developed for the simulation of multiphase reacting flows The code solves conservation equations for gaseous species and droplets or solid particles of various sizes General conservation laws expressed by elliptic type partial differential equations are used in conjunction with rate equations governing the mass momentum enthalpy species turbulent kinetic energy and turbulent dissipation Associated phenomenological submodels of the code include integral combustion two parameter turbulence particle evaporation and interfacial submodels A newly developed integral combustion submodel replacing an Arrhenius type differential reaction submodel has been implemented to improve numerical convergence and enhance numerical stability A two parameter turbulence submodel is modified for both gas and solid phases An evaporation submodel treats not only droplet evaporation but size dispersion Interfacial submodels use correlations to model interfacial momentum and energy transfer The ICOMFLO code solves the governing equations in three steps First a staggered grid system is constructed in the flow domain The staggered grid system defines gas velocity components on the surfaces of a control volume while the other flow properties are defined at the volume center A blocked cell technique is used to handle complex geometry Then the partial differential equations are integrated over each control volume and transformed into discrete difference equations Finally the difference equations are solved iteratively by using a modified SIMPLER algorithm The results of the solution include gas flow properties pressure temperature density species concentration velocity and turbulence parameters and particle flow properties number density temperature velocity and void fraction The code has been used in many engineering applications such as coal fired combustors air breathing propulsion engines and internal combustion engines
