Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was conducted in a community-based setting. The participants were 30 women, aged 40-50 years, who were sedentary and had no history of cardiovascular disease. They were randomly assigned to either a training group or a control group. The training group participated in a 12-week program of aerobic exercise, strength training, and flexibility exercises, three times per week. The control group remained sedentary. The study found that the training group showed significant improvements in physical fitness, including increased aerobic capacity, muscle strength, and flexibility. Additionally, the training group reported improvements in psychological health, including reduced stress, improved mood, and increased self-esteem. The control group showed no significant changes in physical or psychological health. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week training program can have positive effects on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.
