QUESTION 1 What caused the author to think that there were too many parties? What is the author's view on that?	James Madison suggested the Constitution to address the problem of too many competing "factions" or groups of citizens with similar but conflicting interests. He argued that the interests of the majority could oppress the rights of the minority. The Constitution's checks and balances system was designed to prevent this and to ensure that the rights of all citizens are protected.
QUESTION 2 How does the author view the role of the government? What is the author's view on the role of the government?	Madison believed that the government's role was to protect the rights of the citizens and to ensure that the government was not too powerful. He argued that the government should be limited in its powers and that the citizens should have a say in the government's actions.
QUESTION 3 How does the author view the role of the courts? What is the author's view on the role of the courts?	Madison argued that the courts should be independent and should have the power to check the executive and legislative branches. He argued that the courts should be able to declare laws unconstitutional if they violate the Constitution.
QUESTION 4 How does the author view the role of the press? What is the author's view on the role of the press?	Madison argued that the press should be free and should have the power to check the government. He argued that the press should be able to report on the actions of the government and to hold the government accountable.
QUESTION 5 How does the author view the role of the people? What is the author's view on the role of the people?	Madison argued that the people should have a say in the government and that the government should be accountable to the people. He argued that the people should elect their representatives and that the representatives should be able to check the government's actions.
QUESTION 6 How does the author view the role of the states? What is the author's view on the role of the states?	Madison argued that the states should have a say in the government and that the government should be accountable to the states. He argued that the states should elect their representatives and that the representatives should be able to check the government's actions.
QUESTION 7 How does the author view the role of the federal government? What is the author's view on the role of the federal government?	Madison argued that the federal government should be strong and should have the power to check the states. He argued that the federal government should be able to declare laws unconstitutional if they violate the Constitution and that the federal government should be able to enforce the laws of the Constitution.
