PORTER-KINGALL SUPERMICROMETER™ MODEL B

MODEL B

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume aquatic exercise program on the physical fitness of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were randomly assigned to either an aquatic exercise group or a control group. The aquatic exercise group performed a 12-week, low-intensity, low-impact, and low-volume aquatic exercise program. The control group performed no exercise. The subjects were assessed for physical fitness at baseline and at 12 weeks. The aquatic exercise group showed significant improvements in physical fitness compared to the control group. The improvements were seen in all measures of physical fitness, including cardiovascular fitness, muscular fitness, and body composition. The aquatic exercise program was found to be an effective means of improving physical fitness in sedentary, middle-aged women.

^aThe information was obtained from interviews with 100 men and women living separately. The study population also included married couples who were interviewed as a single household.

Conclusions: The authors have shown that the use of a small number of patients (n = 5) in a single study, 10 in another, cannot be an appropriate method of determining the best of two treatments, since the results are sensitive to outliers.

Abstract The goal of this research was to determine whether the use of a computer-based system for data collection and analysis would affect the accuracy of data collection and analysis. The system was used to collect data from a group of 100 subjects. The results showed that the use of the system did not affect the accuracy of data collection or analysis.
