Introduction

Pre-sentence investigation report refers to the kind of investigation report that is carried out to determine the various aspects of the history of a convicted person. The investigation is carried out with the aim of determining the level of education of the person, health (physical and mental) and also the employment of the convicted person. Such kind of investigation is considered useful in that it can help to determine the extent of the sentence which can be imposed on a person. Additionally, this information can also act as exhibit for the kind of crime that is committed by the convicted person. This paper will discuss the purpose, content, and collection of information contained in the pre-sentence investigation report.

Discussion

The pre-sentence investigation report is useful as it provides the basis for a court determine the sentence for a convicted person. This investigation is particularly useful in that it provides the legal and factual issues that are necessary to determine a sentence. As noted by Maveal (1995) "the prison will use information in the report to designate the institution where the offender will serve the sentence and determine the offender's eligibility or need for specific correctional programs". The report contained in the investigation report is also considered useful since it can be used to determine the date on which the convicted person can be released depending on the jurisdiction provided. The information contained in the report is also useful in that it helps the probation officer in charge of the convicted person to undertake an assessment of what is needed for the person and what types of risks are likely to be encountered when handling the person. Future research on criminal cases are based on the current cases, therefore, a presentence investigation report can provide the basis for future research (Yates & Herrick, 2001).

Predictive Sentencing Jan W de Keijser,Julian V Roberts,Jesper Ryberg,2019-05-16 Predictive Sentencing addresses the role of risk assessment in contemporary sentencing practices Predictive sentencing has become so deeply ingrained in Western criminal justice decision making that despite early ethical discussions about selective incapacitation it currently attracts little critique Nor has it been subjected to a thorough normative and empirical scrutiny This is problematic since much current policy and practice concerning risk predictions is inconsistent with mainstream theories of punishment Moreover predictive sentencing exacerbates discrimination and disparity in sentencing Although structured risk assessments may have replaced gut feelings and have now been systematically implemented in Western justice systems the fundamental issues and questions that surround the use of risk assessment instruments at sentencing remain unresolved This volume critically evaluates these issues and will be of great interest to scholars of criminal justice and criminology ABA Journal,1962-08 The ABA Journal serves the legal profession Qualified recipients are lawyers and judges law students law librarians and associate members of the American Bar Association
