1. Introduction

Businesses across the world collect information to gain deep insight about market trends, competitors, consumer behaviors, potential opportunity for growth, and any kind of threats that could inhibit their performance. Therefore, survey research has become a growing field with 20,000 job openings in the United States alone and an estimated growth rate of 24% over the next decade, according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics, U.S. Department of Labor (2012).

As the demand for business research continues to grow, surveys have been extremely popular among quantitative researchers and the design of choice to investigate several issues, particularly in marketing and customer behavior. Besides, a survey design involves collecting data from a representative sample with the intent to generalize the findings to a larger population (Barlett, Kotrlík, & Higgins, 2001). In addition, several researchers argued that survey design is both economical and capable of yielding a quick turnaround in the data collection process (Couper & Miller 2008; Frippiat & Marquis, 2010). However, this process is not always conducted with the same rigor in business as compared with the academia.
