

Of course, other time signatures with bottom numbers such as 32, 64, and potentially even 128 can exist, but are less common, if not rare. The etude below will include 32 and 64 signatures along with some of the other signatures covered in the GUIDE. Please note that several of the measures could have potentially been written in more common signatures and would have sounded exactly the same. Again, composers will sometimes write academically to challenge performers while a more readable version could have easily created the same musical statement. That being said, composers often are faced with this dilemma..."do I want my music to look advanced and challenging (for the performer) or do I want my music to be played". Many times, performers will pass on particular compositions simply based on notational devices used... appearing too complex or too easy will often get music overlooked and therefore, not played. Due to possibilities of multitudes of notational devices and practices, the percussion student must work on being proficient when reading and playing anything that comes their way!

*pay close attention to the metric equations indicating how note values relate to one another when changing time signatures. Some of the ones below are tricky.

BONUS ETUDE #39 - Metric Madness

The musical score for Bonus Etude #39 - Metric Madness is written on four staves in treble clef. The first staff begins with a 2/32 time signature and a metric equation $2 = 16x-32x$. It contains measures with 32nd and 64th notes. The second staff changes to 2/2 time and includes a metric equation $2 = 2$. The third staff changes to 2/4 time and includes a metric equation $2 = 4$. The fourth staff changes to 2/3 time and includes a metric equation $2 = 3$. The score ends with a 4/4 time signature. Dynamics include f, sf, and sfz. The word "edge" appears at the end of the fourth staff.

*much of what is contained in Etude #39 is mathematically challenging to say the least; however, much of the notation could be rewritten in a fashion that would be more understandable and readable for the performer without altering the musical integrity of what the listener will hear. BUT, since the performer will encounter notation as seen above, it must be reiterated that the importance of working on these types of etudes is imperative. Please note the time signature in the last measure of the etude. This signature is the same as 4/4 time and is often referred to as "common time". It will be seen often in place of the 4/4 signature. Again, paying attention to the metric equations will greatly reduce the difficulty level of navigating the multitude of meter changes in Bonus Etude #39.
