

MANUALE DI PSICOLOGIA DELLO SVILUPPO Camaioni

LO SVILUPPO DEL SISTEMA NERVOSO

Le cellule nervose e le loro interconnessioni hanno una struttura caratteristica, diversa nelle differenti parti del cervello, da cui dipende la specificità del nostro comportamento motorio, cognitivo, linguistico ed emotivo.

ASPETTI MORFOLOGICI

Le modifiche di grandezza, di peso e di aspetto esterno del cervello si effettuano con una cronologia estremamente precisa e fissa, e sono pertanto un indice molto affidabile dell'età gestazionale. Il peso del cervello rappresenta il 21% del peso del corpo al sesto mese dal concepimento, il 14% al termine della gravidanza e solo il 3% nell'età adulta. La crescita avviene in maniera diversa in parti differenti del cervello. È più lenta negli emisferi cerebrali e cerebellari, parti filogeneticamente più recenti, e più rapida in altre. La superficie corticale ha un aspetto completamente liscio fino alla sedicesima settimana; le circonvoluzioni cerebrali si formano nel corso della seconda metà della gravidanza, con il comparire dei solchi e delle scissure. Dopo la nascita il peso del cervello si raddoppia nei primi 9 mesi e raggiunge il peso del cervello adulto intorno al sesto anno, con un incremento parallelo della circonferenza cranica.

PRINCIPALI TAPPE SVILUPPO CEREBRALE

Fase embrionale

Nei primi giorni di gestazione una parte di un foglietto embrionale, l'ectoderma, s'ispessisce per dare luogo alla piacca neurale. Questa si invagina, in processo detto di induzione dorsale, formando il tubo neurale, struttura da cui si origina tutto il sistema nervoso centrale periferico ed anche altri organi come gli occhi e la faccia. Una serie di suddivisioni all'interno del tubo neurale (induzione ventrale) danno luogo nelle settimane successive alle principali componenti del sistema nervoso: nella parte anteriore si forma il prosencefalo che costituirà gli emisferi cerebrali, mentre le altre parti danno luogo alle strutture mediane (diencefalo, gangli della base), al tronco cerebrale, al cervelletto, al midollo spinale. Intorno alle 6 settimane di gestazione l'essenziale della struttura macroscopica dell'encefalo è formata e inizia il più complesso fenomeno della sua organizzazione interna, definita fase di maturazione.

Fase di maturazione

In questa fase si riconoscono due fenomeni principali: la proliferazione e la migrazione neuronale. Tutte le cellule cerebrali (neuroni, cellule gliali) si formano per moltiplicazione a partire da particolari distretti del tubo neuronale, definiti come zone germinali. I neuroni cerebrali si formano principalmente tra il 2° e il 4° mese, mentre la moltiplicazione delle cellule gliali inizia al 5° mese e continua fino ai primi anni della vita extrauterina. Appena formate le cellule iniziano il loro processo di spostamento, fino a raggiungere distanze ragguardevoli, per raggiungere la loro sede definitiva a livello della corteccia o
