

The man in the attic

I was 10 years old when we moved into our new home. It was my grandparent's house and they gave it to us shortly before they passed away. The house was in a nice, quiet, and small neighborhood, where everyone knew everyone.

It was a two-story house with an attic and my room was right under it. The attic was rather empty, except for some boxes with things from when I was a little kid, things we were thinking of donating soon.

I used to have a lot of imaginary friends growing up, so when I started hearing murmurs from the ceiling and quiet "Hello's", I wasn't surprised at all. Rather quickly, I and my friend from the attic started talking every night while I was trying to fall asleep, and also quickly I learned his name to be Thomas, or Tommy, as he preferred to be called. He also made me promise to never tell my friends or parents about our friendship because they will get jealous and steal him from me.

Our companionship lasted almost 3 years when my mom heard me talking to me. She came into my room, looking rather distressed, wanting to know who I was speaking with. Forgetting about the promise I made years ago, I told her about my friend, and then she told my father. They called their friend, a police officer, and went to check the attic. There they found Thomas Hardy, a known child murderer that has been missing for 3 years. This killer, they said, used to sneak into houses with one or more small kids, befriend them, and then kill them in various ways, sometimes even eating parts of their flesh.

After that, they made sure that the attic was so secure, not even an imaginary friend could get in.
